

ARTICLE APPEARED
ON PAGE 4THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR
24 December 1981

West Europeans dispute charge Soviets sponsor peace movement

By Elizabeth Pond

Staff correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

tions can be made. In East Berlin no demonstrations can be made." The communists have their own aims, of course — but Frey's and other Christian peace organizations do

How great a role do communists in general — not for that reason shut out communists, he and the Soviet Union in particular have in said. As Christians, they are especially careful not to form an "enemy image" of anyone.

Few West Europeans would go along with President Reagan's assertion that the peace movement here is largely sponsored by the Soviet Union. (His comments are part of an interview taped Dec. 16 for the Public Broad-

(The East German Lutheran Church also insists on this point, for example, in opposing the portrayal of Western nations as enemies in East German schools.)

Western intelligence organizations go further than Frey in perceiving a communist hand, although not in the strong Christian organizations that form one pillar of the antinuclear movements in West Germany. Instead they perceive the communist hand in the Krefeld appeal against NATO nuclear weapons now signed by over a million West Germans.

No evidence of communist stage managing has been presented publicly, but intelligence sources point to the identical wording are steered by communists.

"It's not true," said Ulrich Frey of the Bonn Action Society for Peace, when asked about Reagan's charge. He hadn't previously heard of Reagan's remarks, but he is involved in preparing the written answer of his organization to a query about communist influence on antinuclear movements made by conservative members of Parliament in the West German Bundestag. The Action Society Service for Peace was one of the main organizers of the 250,000 strong antinuclear demonstration in Bonn last October.

In elaborating on his reply, Frey noted that there are many quite different groups in-

involved in antinuclear protests in West Germany. They do include communists — and the West German communists are ideologically orthodox and loyal to Moscow — but the communists are a very minor part either of the West German political scene or of the antinuclear protests.

"We are not so blind as to say that when the German Communist Party works with us it is doing so in a Western democratic sense,"

Frey observed. "In Moscow no demonstrations can be made. In East Berlin no demonstrations can be made." The communists have their own aims, of course — but Frey's and other Christian peace organizations do

How great a role do communists in general — not for that reason shut out communists, he and the Soviet Union in particular have in said. As Christians, they are especially careful not to form an "enemy image" of anyone.

Few West Europeans would go along with President Reagan's assertion that the peace movement here is largely sponsored by the Soviet Union. (His comments are part of an interview taped Dec. 16 for the Public Broad-

(The East German Lutheran Church also insists on this point, for example, in opposing the portrayal of Western nations as enemies in East German schools.)

Western intelligence organizations go further than Frey in perceiving a communist hand, although not in the strong Christian organizations that form one pillar of the antinuclear movements in West Germany. Instead they perceive the communist hand in the Krefeld appeal against NATO nuclear weapons now signed by over a million West Germans.

No evidence of communist stage managing has been presented publicly, but intelligence sources point to the identical wording are steered by communists.

"It's not true," said Ulrich Frey of the Bonn Action Society for Peace, when asked about Reagan's charge. He hadn't previously heard of Reagan's remarks, but he is involved in preparing the written answer of his organization to a query about communist influence on antinuclear movements made by conservative members of Parliament in the West German Bundestag. The Action Society Service for Peace was one of the main organizers of the 250,000 strong antinuclear demonstration in Bonn last October.

In elaborating on his reply, Frey noted that there are many quite different groups in-

involved in antinuclear protests in West Germany. They do include communists — and the West German communists are ideologically orthodox and loyal to Moscow — but the communists are a very minor part either of the West German political scene or of the antinuclear protests.

"We are not so blind as to say that when the German Communist Party works with us it is doing so in a Western democratic sense,"

Frey observed. "In Moscow no demonstra-

STAT